

Thirty Years in Baseball.

BY ADRIAN ANSON.

Players' League Formed on Nov. 4, 1889, and as Finally Organized Took in the Cities of Boston, Brooklyn, New York and Philadelphia in the East and Buffalo, Chicago, Cleveland and Pittsburg in West—its Life Short and Stormy.

John Ward, who was the Brotherhood leader, was about at the time this occurred, so no official action was taken by that organization. By the time he got home contracts for that season had been signed and nothing could be done. Ward favored a strike at the time, but he was outvoted by his followers. Just about that time the New York management agreed to release Johnny to Washington for the sum of $12,000, the highest price ever offered for a player, but Ward spoiled the deal by declining flatfooted to be sold to the national capital club.

Then the kicking players appointed a committee to present their grievances to the league, and President Young named a league committee to confer with the other. Mr. Spaulding was chairman and he declined to meet the Brotherhood folks until fall, although they wanted an immediate hearing. That refusal upset the team. The Brotherhood people began at once to work with the utmost secrecy, to plan secession.

WARD CAME TO ME WITH A PROPOSITION

ber of games won and forty-five lost, and Chicago stood third with sixty-five games won and the same number lost. Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Indianapolis and Washington following in the order given.

Old League Shaken Up.
 That fall was an exciting one for the national game. What is known in baseball history as the "Brotherhood revolt" was sprung, and for a time it was pretty strenuous work for a player to find out where he was at. It was a movement that shook the old league to its foundations, robbing it of many of its best players and upsetting all its plans in general. I believed then, and I have never since regretted that I believed that the whole business was due to greed. The game had become such a money maker that its business end had put every other consideration into the shade.

It has been charged time and again that this Brotherhood affair was hatched and put into working order by the ring-leaders during the round-the-world tour. It may or may not be true, but I want to say right here that I never heard a whisper of it until late in that season. The first I knew of it was when John M. Ward came to me with a proposition to unite with the seceders, an invitation I declined at once with thanks. I told Ward frankly that the League had always been perfectly square with me and that it would amount to treachery for me to leave it in such an underhand manner. He argued that the time had come to work a change in baseball matters, and he declared that the players had made some reason to put up a kick, but didn't intend to let myself be used as a cat's paw to help a lot of greedy capitalists pull the financial chestnuts out of the fire.

Now, originally, the Brotherhood was a secret organization formed for the purpose of protecting the players in their rights and not for the business of breaking up the old League and forming a new one in opposition. That came in as an afterthought. The order began to show its power in 1897, when it compelled the League to draw up a new form of contract, in which the rights of the players were more clearly set forth. When this new contract was adopted, the full amount of a player's salary couldn't be stated in it on account of the $2,000 limit clause of the National Agreement, and as the American Association clubs wouldn't allow this to be stricken out, the players were mighty hot over it. They had to sign contracts at $2,000 and make outside contracts for all they got over that amount.

Players Classified in 1888.
 At the annual meeting of the League in 1888 some of the clubs demanded a ruling that would limit players' salaries, which had grown to enormous proportions. The outcome was a classification rule which divided players into five grades: Class A to receive $2,000; Class B, $2,500; Class C, $3,000; Class D, $3,500; and Class E, $4,000. It was agreed among the clubs that this classification should not apply to players then under contract to those who were absent on the round-the-world tour. We were allowed two weeks after our return to arrange indi-
